

Winter

I just love winter, it's the time of year to bundle up in a jacket, coat, hat, gloves, fuzzy socks and boots to drink hot chocolate and spend quality time with family, friends, and even your neighbor.

You can go sledding with friends, skiing with family, and if you're crazy enough to jump into a very, very cold, icy lake, and my personal favorite bundle up next to a fire with some warm heart soothing hot chocolate.

Slurrrp, ahhh, the sound of hot chocolate going down your mouth giving you small chills all over your body.

You look out your window and a thick, warm, fuzzy blanket of ice covers the Earth's surface. You feel your body getting more eager to go outside and play all day in the glistening snow and the delicate, detailed snow flakes. Once you get outside if you look very closely you can see the very detailed patterns in every snowflake that beautiful mother nature gave us that very day.

Another reason why I love winter so much is because Christmas is coming up and there is people rushing up and down the streets trying to get their Christmas tree ready, all the rapping, and their Christmas feast ready. By doing this they spread holiday joy all over town leaving some people thinking "Wow! I love this time of year!"
