

Have you ever had a pet before? I know you have. If it died, and if it's buried then it's still part of your family because you are the one who owned it. It is still your family member.

You can get that feeling in videos, books, movies, and of course the Internet. I know how that feels like. I met a nice lady who has a pet. She never fed it, gave it a bath, and mostly never ever took good care of it. Can you believe that?

There is a movie called: Cat and Dogs. The boy had a pet because his other one ran away. He doesn't treat his dog very nice and the last part the dog almost died and he was very worried because it was an explosion, but the dog survived. The boy learned his lesson.

I think that pets are a big part of your family. (Without them you will be bored and funless!) I am trying to tell you that pets are good friends.

Pets can be a really big part of the family. Dogs/cats can probably bring a family closer together. That's why animals can be a big part of the family. I love having pets.

I know this is true because our three dogs that we got brought our family closer together because me and my brother use to hate each other. But then we kept going outside together feeding the dogs together. That's when our dogs made us closer together.

I also have seen this happen on Dog with a Blog because the mom and the dad got remarried. The dad had already had kids and the mom had already had kids but the kids hated each other so much.

This makes me wonder how dogs make a family come closer together? This also makes me think this is weird!

Pets can be a big part of family because what if you live alone and don't have anyone to talk to? Well a pet will be a good start.

I know because when my grandma died I thought I was alone and well, I talked to my cat and it made me feel loved again. (I'm not saying I live alone, it is just my grandma was so much like me.)

I watched 7th Heaven and when Simon got made, sad, or angry he would talk to Happy his dog and it made him feel better.

I think if you include an animal to help you feel better...well I think the animal will love you back.

Pets can be a big part of a family. Pets are kind, loyal, and can make someone feel better. Dogs and cats are especially good pets for curling up on the couch and watching a good movie!

I have four dogs and love all of them. Even though sometimes they can be a real pain they are good friends and respectful playmates!

There is a movie I've seen called Because of Winn-Dixie. The movie is about a girl finding a dog in a store and she names him Winn-Dixie. The girl loves Winn Dixie so much, towards the end of the movie she goes out in a storm just to look for him! That's how much she loved him!

Now I think about it and I feel stronger about my dog than ever. I wonder if my dogs feel the same way!
